READING SECTION:

Between the Screen and the Field

There were two boys in a city, and they were best friends. One was named Abraham Lincoln, and the other was Yi Sun-sin. What they both had in common was their love for soccer. Abraham Lincoln liked to watch games. He was a spectator. He enjoyed watching TV and didn't want to get tired after playing soccer. He learned about strategies and liked the fan culture more than playing soccer.

On the other hand, Yi Sun-sin was different because he was an athlete. He enjoyed playing soccer the most. The adrenaline made him enjoy soccer. He liked playing in a team and the thrill of the game. He thought watching soccer games was boring.

One day, Abraham asked Sun-sin to watch soccer on TV. Sun-sin saw a player do a great move. It was an exciting moment. Sun-sin thought, "Watching soccer on TV can be fun, too. He liked the idea of watching it at home. Next, Sun-sin took Abraham to play soccer in the park. Abraham tried hard. He felt his heart pounding with excitement. He thought it was a great opportunity to experience something new. He said, "Playing is fun. I feel alive!"

Now, Abraham Lincoln and Yi Sun-sin both like watching and playing soccer. They learned it was important to keep an open mind and that it was worth trying something new. They enjoy soccer together and have a great time together.
