Bhutan: A Land of Wonders

In Bhutan, there's a village named Tashi. Pema lives there, often wearing her traditional 'kira'. She loves sharing stories about her home. One day, Jiho from Korea arrived, eager to explore Bhutan's culture and nature.

"Hello, Jiho!" Pema greeted. "Ever tried Ema Datshi?" She handed him a plate filled with spicy peppers and cheese. "This is a traditional food of my country." Jiho tasted it. "It's spicy but delicious!" Pema smiled. "Let's visit our Dzongs. They're big, old buildings with thick walls and tall towers. They tell stories of our history."

While walking, they saw fields of red rice with the backdrop of the amazing Himalayas. Men in 'ghos' and women in 'kiras' went about their day. Jiho liked the look of the gho. So, he decided to try it on! Pema said, "You look cool in that!" Some locals practice archery, which is Bhutan's national sport. Jiho saw them and wanted to try it out. He practiced with them and found it difficult but fun.

Later, they climbed a small hill. From there, they saw the village, with prayer flags flapping in the breeze. The sun was setting, casting a golden shade over Tashi. The beautiful wonders of nature moved Jiho. "Thank you," Jiho said, looking around. "Bhutan is beautiful. I love the traditions and the peaceful nature." Pema nodded. "We're proud of our home. I hope you remember Bhutan." Jiho smiled. "I'll always remember."
